

Do you want to improve coordination/reaction time?

Being a stroke patient myself, I needed a simple device that can improve my coordination. Although there are exercises to improve coordination, I realized there are no simple devices out there that I could use to measure my own improvements in an objective way. I needed a device that can improve the coordination on my arm as well as my leg. Coordination is so valuable in activities of daily living like brushing teeth, shaving etc. when you lack coordination, your muscles miscalculate the force that is required for a particular activity. Coordination allows for a smooth motion of your joints.

So, out of necessity to improve my own coordination I devised the "J coordinator." It's not going to cure your coordination deficits but it will definitely improve it. There is a timer to measure improvements allowing you to visually see the improvements with your own eyes! There are two options on the J coordinator, one allows you to work on your coordination and the other option called random can be used to improve your reaction time. Every household should have one to improve the driver's reaction time. This device can easily be used to improve coordination and reaction time on your arms and legs. Put the device on a table to work on arms and leave it on the floor to work on leg.
